How do you attach a bath panel to a bath?

Do all bath panels fit all baths? Though there are several common bath panel sizes for both front panels and end panels, there isn't a one-size-fits-all when it comes to a bath panel. Yet, bath panels can be cut to size so you'll just need to make sure your choice covers the bath you intend to fit.

How do you use bath panel clips? Screw the clips included with your panel into the underside of the lip of the tub, placing 1 in the middle and at least 1 on each end. Push the panel into place, securing it with the clips. Press gently on various parts of the panel to ensure it's secure.

Do you silicone around a bath panel? You will need to use wood adhesive on the inside of the panel where the panel and the batten meet. Then you can fit your panel into place. Now, use a silicone sealant and sealant gun along all of the joints. This will make the edges around your panel waterproof and prevent any water damage.

How to stop a bath panel from popping out? You could try redrilling through the side panel into the end panel at a different angle to pull it back with a screw, but it is probably better to fix a batten on the floor to stop it happening again, when the photo reveals what you have behind there.

Should a bath panel be flush with the bath? The panel must sit flush or slightly indented to the bath lip.

How to cut a bath panel to fit? Can You Cut a Bath Panel to Size? If cutting your bath panel to size, the best way is to use a hacksaw and gently cut the panel to size, sanding down the edges so it slots in nicely and doesn't look messy. It is however recommended that you buy the panel in the specific measurements that you need for your bath.

Do bath panels need a frame? Typically, you will need a frame around your bath to have something to fit the bath panels to. If you're using clips, screws or adhesive, you will need to build a wooden perimeter along the floor, called battens, and, if necessary, vertical battens where you want to fix the panels to.
