The Anatomy of Evil: A Q&A with Michael H. Stone

1. What is your definition of evil?

Michael H. Stone, a forensic psychiatrist who has studied violent criminals for over 40 years, defines evil as "the willful infliction of harm on others for no apparent reason." He believes that evil is a deliberate choice that cannot be blamed on factors such as mental illness or childhood trauma.

2. What are the characteristics of evil people?

Stone has identified seven core characteristics of evil people:

- Lack of empathy: They cannot understand or care about the feelings of others.
- Grandiosity: They have an inflated sense of self-importance and believe they are above the law.
- Sadism: They derive pleasure from causing pain and suffering to others.
- Narcissism: They are obsessed with their own needs and desires.
- Antisocial personality disorder: They have a pervasive disregard for the rights of others.
- Psychopathy: They lack guilt or remorse for their actions.

- Callousness: They have no regard for the well-being of others.

3. Are evil people born or made?

Stone believes that evil is a combination of nature and nurture. He argues that some people are more likely to be evil due to their genetic makeup or early life experiences. However, he also emphasizes that evil is a choice, and that even those who are predisposed to it can resist it if they choose.

4. Can evil people be treated or cured?

Stone believes that evil people can be treated, but not cured. He has developed a treatment program called the Violence Prevention Program (VPP) that has been shown to be effective in reducing violence and recidivism among violent criminals. The VPP focuses on teaching empathy, impulse control, and problem-solving skills.

5. What can we do to prevent evil from happening?

Stone believes that the best way to prevent evil is to create a society that is based on empathy, compassion, and respect for the rights of others. He also emphasizes the importance of early intervention and treatment for those who are at risk for violence.
