What is the process of radiation curing? Radiation curing essentially involves the application of a thin coating of a viscous prepolymer-monomer mixture onto a substrate, followed by passage under a radiation source to solidify the coating.

What is radiation curing of polymeric materials? Basically light absorbed by a photoinitiator generates free-radical type initiators or catalysts which induce the crosslinking reactions of functionalized oligomers/monomers to generate a cured film. The mechanisms for free-radical type photocurable and cationic photocurable systems can be discussed individually.

What are the four phases of the curing process?

How can radiation be cured? Depending on the dose, the effects of radiation can be mild or life-threatening. There is no cure, but barriers can prevent exposure and some medications may remove some radiation from the body. Anyone who believes they have been exposed to radiation should seek medical attention as soon as possible.

How does radiation affect polymeric materials? Irradiation of polymers causes modification of properties which is currently the basis of major industries in heat shrinkable film and tubing, crosslinked polymers and grafted copolymers (3). This area is now entering an era of new technology resulting from greater knowledge of the chemical processes.

What is the radiation process of polymers? High energy radiation generates radicals on polymers. The combination of radicals generated on two polymers can lead to formation of grafted copolymer, random block copolymer, cross-linked polymer interpenetrating networks or semi-interpenetrating networks as shown in Figure 12.

How does polymer curing work? Curing is a chemical process employed in polymer chemistry and process engineering that produces the toughening or hardening of a polymer material by cross-linking of polymer chains.

What are the four 4 ways of curing?

What is the most important in curing? Salt. Salt (sodium chloride) is the primary ingredient used in meat curing. Removal of water and addition of salt to meat creates a solute-rich environment where osmotic pressure draws water out of microorganisms, slowing down their growth. Doing this requires a concentration of salt of nearly 20%.

What is the difference between curing and crosslinking? Crosslinking generally involves covalent bonds that join two polymer chains. The term curing refers to the crosslinking of thermosetting resins, such as unsaturated polyester and epoxy resin, and the term vulcanization is characteristically used for rubbers.

What materials protect against radiation? Shielding: Barriers of lead, concrete, or water provide protection from penetrating radiation such as gamma rays and neutrons. This is why certain radioactive materials are stored under water or in concrete or lead-lined rooms, and why dentists place a lead blanket on patients receiving x-rays of their teeth.

How to neutralize radiation? Decontamination. Decontamination involves removing external radioactive particles. Removing clothing and shoes eliminates about 90% of external contamination. Gently washing with water and soap removes additional radiation particles from the skin.

Why can't you have radiation twice? While this risk is low, it depends on how much radiation is given. A second round of radiation treatment can increase the risk of a second cancer. The body doesn't forget its first encounter with radiation, so you can't treat it a second time like you did the first time.

What is the process for radiation treatment? Overall, there are five basic steps of radiation therapy that we can share to give patients an idea of what to expect. These steps include initial consultation, simulation, treatment planning, treatment delivery and post treatment follow-up. Consultation is the first step of the radiation therapy process.

What is the curing process? Curing is any of various food preservation and flavoring processes of foods such as meat, fish and vegetables, by the addition of salt, with the aim of drawing moisture out of the food by the process of osmosis.

What is the process of radiation method? In the radiation method of plane table surveying, the direction of the objects or points to be located are obtained by drawing radial lines along fiducial edge of alidade after getting the objects or points bisected along the line of sight of the alidade.

What is the process of IR curing? IR-curing can be carried out by short, medium, or long wavelength IR-radiation (Fig. 2). through the coating to be absorbed by the substrate. This type of cure is therefore best suited for complex part shapes (non line-of-sight heating) where it is used to heat the substrate.
