The Trouble with Emma

What is the main conflict in the novel "Emma"? The main conflict in "Emma" centers around Emma Woodhouse's misguided attempts at matchmaking. Her desire to control the lives of those around her leads to a series of misunderstandings and social blunders.

How does Emma's character flaw contribute to her trouble? Emma's flaw is her excessive pride and self-assurance. She believes herself to be a master matchmaker, despite her lack of experience and understanding of others' feelings. This hubris blinds her to the consequences of her actions.

What are some examples of the trouble that Emma causes? Emma's meddling results in several embarrassing and hurtful situations. She encourages Mr. Elton to pursue Harriet Smith, despite knowing that Harriet has feelings for Mr. Knightley. She also tries to keep Mr. Knightley from marrying Jane Fairfax, even though she knows that they are deeply in love.

How does Emma's character develop throughout the novel? Emma's experiences with love, loss, and friendship gradually change her perspective. She learns the importance of humility, empathy, and selflessness. By the end of the novel, she has matured significantly and grown into a wiser and more compassionate woman.

What is the ultimate resolution to Emma's troubles? Emma's troubles are ultimately resolved through her own self-reflection and the intervention of Mr. Knightley. He helps her to see her own mistakes and encourages her to apologize to those she has wronged. Emma's redemption comes through her willingness to learn from her experiences and to embrace the value of true friendship and love.
