Titration Pre-Lab Answers

1. What is titration?

Titration is a laboratory technique used to determine the concentration of a solution by carefully adding a known volume of a reagent to it until a chemical reaction occurs.

2. What are the different types of titrations?

There are various types of titrations, including acid-base titration, redox titration, and complexometric titration. Each type of titration utilizes a different reagent to react with the analyte in the solution.

3. What is the endpoint of a titration?

The endpoint of a titration is the point at which the reaction between the analyte and the reagent is complete. It is typically indicated by a color change, the formation of a precipitate, or a change in pH.

4. What is the equivalence point of a titration?

The equivalence point of a titration is the point at which the moles of the analyte in the solution are equal to the moles of the reagent added. This point coincides with the endpoint in certain titrations, but it may differ in others.

5. How do you calculate the concentration of a solution using titration?

The concentration of the solution can be calculated using the following formula:

$$\text{Concentration} = (\text{Moles of reagent added}) / (\text{Volume of solution titrated})$$

The moles of reagent added can be calculated by multiplying its concentration and volume, while the volume of solution titrated is the volume of the analyte solution added from the buret.
