Second Language Acquisition: An Oxford Introduction

Q: What is second language acquisition (SLA)?

A: SLA refers to the process of learning a language that is not one's native language. It encompasses the cognitive, linguistic, and social mechanisms involved in this learning process.

Q: What are the stages of SLA?

A: The stages of SLA vary, but generally include: pre-production (silent period), early production, speech emergence, intermediate fluency, and advanced fluency. Learners progress through these stages at different rates and in different ways.

Q: What factors influence SLA?

A: Numerous factors influence SLA, including age, first language, motivation, learning environment, and exposure to the target language. Age and first language are particularly significant, as younger learners tend to acquire language more easily and transfer features from their native language.

Q: What are some methods for teaching SLA?

A: There are various methods for teaching SLA, such as:

- Communicative Language Teaching: Focuses on using language for real-world communication.
- Immersion: Exposes learners to the target language in a natural environment.
- Task-Based Learning: Uses tasks to promote language acquisition and development.
- Technology-Enhanced Learning: Incorporates technology into language learning, such as mobile apps and online platforms.

Q: What are the challenges of SLA?

A: SLA can pose challenges, such as:

- Interference from the First Language: Learners may transfer features from their native language into the target language.
- Limited Exposure to the Target Language: Lack of exposure to the target language can hinder acquisition.
- Affective Factors: Motivation, anxiety, and confidence can impact language learning success.

- Individual Differences: Learners' cognitive abilities, learning styles, and language preferences vary, affecting SLA outcomes.
