Subtractive Schooling: Oppressing Mexican Youth Through the Politics of Caring

Subtractive schooling, as described by Angela Valenzuela in her seminal work "The Politics of Caring," is an educational practice that undermines the cultural, linguistic, and social identities of Mexican youth. This article explores Valenzuela's analysis of this harmful approach through a series of questions and answers.

Q1: What is subtractive schooling? A1: Subtractive schooling is a mode of education that emphasizes the dominant culture and language while suppressing the home cultures and languages of students from marginalized communities.

Q2: How does subtractive schooling affect Mexican youth? A2: It can erode their cultural self-esteem, diminishing their sense of belonging and connection to their heritage. It also limits their academic success by ignoring their cultural strengths and perspectives.

Q3: What is the "politics of caring" in relation to subtractive schooling? A3: Valenzuela argues that subtractive schooling is often justified by a misguided notion of "caring" for students. By assimilating them into the dominant culture, educators believe they are preparing them for future success. However, this approach fails to recognize the value of students' cultural backgrounds.

Q4: What are the alternatives to subtractive schooling? A4: Additive schooling, as proposed by Valenzuela, focuses on building upon students' cultural experiences and linguistic skills. It creates a supportive learning environment that fosters their cultural identities and academic growth.

Q5: What is the importance of understanding subtractive schooling? A5: Recognizing the harmful effects of subtractive schooling is crucial for promoting educational equity and supporting the well-being of marginalized youth. It requires educators to critically examine their practices and create inclusive classrooms that value all students.

Time Value of Money: Problems and Solutions by Prasanna Chandra

Paragraph 1:

The time value of money (TVM) is a fundamental concept in finance that accounts for the different value of money at different points in time. This is due to the fact that money in the present can be invested to earn interest, which increases its value over time. Conversely, money in the future is less valuable because its purchasing power decreases due to inflation.

Paragraph 2:

One of the key problems with TVM is calculating the present value (PV) of a future amount of money. The PV is the value of the future amount today, taking into account the interest rate and the time period. This is important for budgeting and investment planning.

Paragraph 3:

Another issue is calculating the future value (FV) of a present amount of money. The FV is the value of the present amount at a specified future date, including interest earned. This is useful for determining the potential return on an investment.

Paragraph 4:

Prasanna Chandra, a renowned finance expert, has developed several solutions to help individuals understand and apply TVM. One solution is the compound interest formula, which calculates the FV of an investment over a specified time period, taking into account interest compounding.

Paragraph 5:

Another solution is the annuity formula, which calculates the PV or FV of a series of equal payments made at regular intervals. This is useful for planning regular savings or loan payments. By understanding TVM and using Prasanna Chandra's solutions, individuals can make informed financial decisions and achieve their financial goals.
