For example, a counselor might say "When I just shared my interpretation of what you were saying I noticed your facial expression changed.

What should a progress note include? Progress notes cover three basic categories of information: what you observe about the client in session, what it means, and what you (or your client) are going to do about it. They can also be completed collaboratively with the client, to help establish a therapeutic alliance.

What is the format for progress notes? Progress notes record the date, location, duration, and services provided, and include a brief narrative. Documentation should substantiate the duration and frequency of service delivery. The narrative should describe the following elements: Client's symptoms/behaviors.

What not to write in a progress note? Jumping to conclusions: Progress notes should document objective observations and findings based on medical assessments. Avoid making assumptions about patients; this can limit your perspective and hinder effective care planning. Information overload: While thoroughness is essential, avoid including irrelevant details.

How long should a therapy progress note be? While some therapists claim to spend between two to five minutes on each progress therapy note, most agree that at least fifteen minutes are necessary to reflect upon a 45-minute session.

Reflecting meaning: Brief statement that connects client's experience to a deeper meaning system.

What is an example of role play in therapy? Role-play is frequently used to introduce the concept of generalization of therapeutic techniques to other contexts. For example, if a client has been working on increasing his assertive behavior with his wife around money issues, the therapist may ask him to role-play confrontation with a friend or a problem at work.

What is an example of reflecting content? For example, "While talking about the loss of your dog (content) I experience you as alternating between anger and sadness (affect). That makes a lot of sense to me (self-disclosure), since you told me that seeing your dog at the end of a stressful day kept you grounded (meaning)".

How to write process notes in counselling? Process notes are different from session notes; they are written by the therapist for use in supervision or for personal reflection. Process notes often take a journal-like form, focusing on the process between therapist and client, and the counsellor's own thoughts and feelings in the work.
