The Stress of Life: Selye's 1976 Model

Q: What is stress? A: Stress is a physiological response to a perceived threat or demand. It is the body's way of preparing to fight or flee. When we experience stress, our bodies release hormones such as cortisol and adrenaline, which increase our heart rate, breathing, and muscle tension.

Q: What are the stressors in our lives? A: Stressors can be anything that challenges us or makes us feel threatened. Common stressors include work, relationships, finances, health, and major life events such as moving or losing a job.

Q: What are the stages of stress? A: According to Hans Selye's 1976 model, stress occurs in three stages:

- Alarm reaction: This is the initial response to stress, where the body releases hormones to prepare for fight or flight.
- Resistance: If the stressor continues, the body will enter a stage of resistance, where it tries to adapt to the stress and maintain balance.
- Exhaustion: If the stressor continues for an extended period, the body will eventually run out of resources and enter a stage of exhaustion, which can lead to physical and mental health problems.

Q: How can we manage stress? A: There are many different ways to manage stress. Some helpful strategies include:

- Exercise
- Relaxation techniques (such as yoga, meditation, or deep breathing)
- Healthy diet
- Sufficient sleep
- Social support

Q: When should I seek professional help for stress? A: If you are experiencing persistent stress that is affecting your physical or mental health, it is important to seek professional help. A therapist can help you identify the sources of your stress and develop coping mechanisms.
