The Unification of Italy: 1815-70

Access to History

Paragraph 1: Background

Italy was divided into multiple independent states after the fall of the Roman Empire. Following the Napoleonic Wars, the Congress of Vienna (1815) restored most of these states, including the Kingdom of Sardinia-Piedmont. This kingdom became the driving force behind Italian unification under the leadership of Count Camillo di Cavour.

Paragraph 2: Cavour's Policies

Cavour pursued a series of diplomatic and military alliances to weaken Austrian influence in Italy. He also implemented economic reforms to strengthen Sardinia-Piedmont's military and industrial capabilities. In the Second Italian War of Independence (1859), Sardinia-Piedmont and France defeated Austria, leading to the annexation of Lombardy.

Paragraph 3: The Risorgimento

The "Risorgimento" ("Resurgence") movement inspired a surge of Italian nationalism and popular support for unification. Giuseppe Garibaldi, a charismatic and popular general, led a force of volunteers in conquering Sicily and southern Italy in 1860. His forces joined with Sardinia-Piedmont to capture the Papal States and complete the unification of Italy in 1870.

Paragraph 4: Obstacles and Challenges

The unification of Italy faced significant obstacles, including opposition from Austria, the Pope, and conservative elements within Italy. The process was also marked by political instability and the suppression of dissent. Rome remained under the control of the Pope until 1870, when it was finally annexed as the capital of the newly unified Kingdom of Italy.

Paragraph 5: Significance

The unification of Italy was a significant event in European history, marking the creation of a major nation-state and bolstering the cause of nationalism. It had lasting implications for the balance of power in Europe and shaped the political development of Italy in the following decades.
