Sensory Integration Inventory-Revised: A Comprehensive Assessment of Sensory Processing

The Sensory Integration Inventory-Revised (SII-R) is a standardized assessment tool used to evaluate sensory processing in individuals of all ages. Sensory processing is the brain's ability to receive, organize, and interpret sensory information from the environment. Difficulties in sensory processing can lead to a range of challenges, including difficulties with attention, social interaction, and motor skills.

What Does the SII-R Measure?

The SII-R measures 13 sensory processing categories:

- Visual perception
- Auditory perception
- Tactile perception
- Vestibular perception
- Proprioception
- Interoception
- Hypersensitivity to sensory stimuli
- Oversensitivity to movement
- Sensory modulation
- Praxis (motor planning)

- Participation in daily activities
- Emotional responses to sensory stimuli
- Behavioral responses to sensory stimuli

How is the SII-R Administered?

The SII-R is typically administered by a trained occupational therapist or other healthcare professional. The assessment involves a series of questions and activities designed to assess the individual's sensory processing abilities. Parents or caregivers may also be asked to provide input.

How are the Results Interpreted?

The SII-R results are analyzed to identify areas of sensory processing strengths and weaknesses. The healthcare professional will discuss the results with the individual and their family and develop a treatment plan to address any identified difficulties.

What are the Benefits of the SII-R?

The SII-R provides valuable information that can help identify and diagnose sensory processing disorders. It can also:

- Monitor the effectiveness of sensory interventions
- Provide a baseline for future assessments
- Guide educational and therapeutic interventions
- Improve the individual's daily functioning and quality of life
