Welcome to "Ektee Bari Ektee Khamar" Project and Palli

What is the "Ektee Bari Ektee Khamar" project?

The "Ektee Bari Ektee Khamar" project is an innovative and sustainable rural development initiative launched by the Bangladesh government to improve the livelihoods of rural communities. The project aims to transform each household into a self-sufficient unit by providing them with access to land, agricultural training, and livestock.

How does the project work?

Under the project, each household is allocated a plot of land, typically around 1 acre (0.4 hectares). They are then provided with training and support in agricultural practices, livestock rearing, and other income-generating activities. The project also promotes community-based organizations and cooperatives to foster collaboration and economic growth.

What are the benefits of the project?

The "Ektee Bari Ektee Khamar" project has brought numerous benefits to rural communities in Bangladesh, including:

- Increased agricultural productivity and food security
- Improved income and economic stability
- Enhanced access to health and education services
- Strengthened community bonds and social cohesion
- Reduced rural-urban migration

How can I participate in the project?

Eligibility for the "Ektee Bari Ektee Khamar" project varies depending on location and specific criteria set by the government. Interested individuals should contact their local government representatives or the project implementing agency in their area.

What is the impact of the project on the environment?

The project emphasizes sustainable agricultural practices and environmental conservation. Farmers are trained in soil management, water conservation, and the use of organic fertilizers. The project also promotes agroforestry and the planting of trees to enhance biodiversity and mitigate climate change.
