What is the difference between multilevel model and regression? In classical regression, estimates of varying effects can be noisy, especially when there are few observations per group; multilevel modeling allows us to estimate these interactions to the extent supported by the data.

What is the difference between hierarchical regression and multilevel regression? Hierarchical linear modeling allows you to model nested data more appropriately than a regular multiple linear regression. Hierarchical regression, on the other hand, deals with how predictor (independent) variables are selected and entered into the model.

What is multilevel or hierarchical models? The basic idea of hierarchical modeling (also known as multilevel modeling, empirical Bayes, random coefficient modeling, or growth curve modeling) is to think of the lowest-level units (smallest and most numerous) as organized into a hierarchy of successively higher-level units.
