The Rule of Law: A Q&A with Lord Tom Bingham

What is the rule of law?

According to Lord Tom Bingham, the rule of law is "the foundation of a just and free society." It means that all people are subject to the same laws, regardless of their status or position in society. The rule of law also requires that the laws be clear and predictable, and that they be applied fairly and consistently.

Why is the rule of law important?

The rule of law is important for a number of reasons. First, it protects people from arbitrary and oppressive government action. When the government is subject to the rule of law, it cannot simply do whatever it wants. It must follow the same laws that apply to everyone else.

Second, the rule of law promotes predictability and stability. When people know what the laws are and how they will be applied, they can plan their lives accordingly. This helps to create a sense of order and security in society.

Third, the rule of law fosters equality and justice. When all people are subject to the same laws, it helps to level the playing field and ensure that everyone has a fair chance to succeed.

What are some examples of the rule of law in action?

There are many examples of the rule of law in action. Here are a few:

- A police officer cannot arrest someone without probable cause.
- A judge cannot sentence someone to prison without a fair trial.
- The government cannot take private property without just compensation.
- Everyone has the right to vote, regardless of their race, religion, or gender.

What are some threats to the rule of law?

There are a number of threats to the rule of law, including:

- Corruption
- Political interference in the??
- Government overreach

- Terrorism

How can we protect the rule of law?

We can protect the rule of law by:

- Supporting independent and impartial courts.
- Holding our elected officials accountable for their actions.
- Speaking out against corruption and abuse of power.
- Educating ourselves and others about the importance of the rule of law.
