The Perfect Mile: Three Athletes, One Goal, and Less Than Four Minutes to Achieve It

The mile run is one of the most iconic events in track and field. It's a test of speed, endurance, and determination. And for three athletes in the 1950s, it became a race against time to break the four-minute barrier.

The Quest for the Perfect Mile

For decades, the four-minute mile was considered an impossible feat. But in 1954, Roger Bannister, an English medical student, shattered that barrier with a time of 3:59.4. Just over a month later, John Landy of Australia ran a 3:58.0. And less than a year after that, Wes Santee of the United States equaled Bannister's time.

The Three Contenders

Bannister, Landy, and Santee were all extraordinary athletes. Bannister was a gifted runner with a strong finish. Landy was known for his incredible endurance. And Santee had blistering speed.

The Perfect Setting

On May 6, 1954, Bannister lined up at the start of the Iffley Road Track in Oxford, England. The conditions were perfect: cool, clear, and slightly windy. Just over three minutes later, he crossed the finish line as the first person to ever run a mile in under four minutes.

The Inspiration

Bannister's achievement inspired countless people around the world. It showed that anything is possible if you set your mind to it. And it also set off a wave of interest in the mile run. In the years that followed, dozens of runners have broken the four-minute barrier.
