The Hate Factory: A Firsthand Account of the 1980 Riot at the Penitentiary of New Mexico

The Penitentiary of New Mexico (PNM) was a notoriously overcrowded and violent prison in the early 1980s. On February 2, 1980, a full-scale riot erupted, resulting in 33 deaths and countless injuries. "The Hate Factory" is a firsthand account of the riot written by Tony Jaramillo, an inmate who witnessed the horrors firsthand.

Q: What sparked the riot?

A: A combination of factors contributed to the riot, including overcrowding, poor living conditions, and a lack of rehabilitation programs. Additionally, racial tensions between inmate groups had been simmering for years, creating an atmosphere of violence and mistrust.

Q: How did the riot begin?

A: On the day of the riot, a fight broke out between two inmate groups. The guards failed to contain the incident, and it quickly escalated into a full-blown rebellion. Inmates took control of several cell blocks and armed themselves with makeshift weapons.

Q: What were your experiences during the riot?

A: Jaramillo recounts hiding in his cell for 10 days, listening to the chaos and violence raging outside. He witnessed the brutal beatings and killings of fellow inmates and lived in constant fear for his own life.

Q: What was the aftermath of the riot?

A: The riot had a devastating impact on PNM and the New Mexico prison system as a whole. The prison was placed on lockdown, and hundreds of inmates were transferred to other facilities. A federal investigation was launched, and the riot led to reforms aimed at improving living conditions and addressing racial tensions in prisons.

Q: What lessons can be learned from the PNM riot?

A: Jaramillo argues that the riot highlights the dangers of overcrowding, understaffing, and a lack of rehabilitative programs in prisons. He believes that by investing in these areas, society can prevent future tragedies and create a more humane and just penal system.
