How does Ezra Pounds In a Station of the Metro embody the ideals of modernism and imagism? Final answer: Ezra Pound's "In a Station of the Metro" is a modernist and imagist poem that embodies Pound's principle of making literature new by capturing a fleeting moment in an urban setting through a vivid and direct image, showcasing the hallmarks of imagism.

What is a metaphor In a Station of the Metro? The two-line poem also contains two metaphors — the station of the metro as a "wet, black bough" and of faces of the crowd as "petals". Firstly, the metaphor allows the reader to gain insight into the setting Pound creates; the station, when described as a "wet, black bough" can be seen as a dark tunnel.

What is the structure of a station of the metro? The poem is structured paratactically: two images are juxtaposed and the relationship between them, presumably a metaphorical one, is left implicit.
