Section A: Multiple Choice Questions (20 marks)

This section tests learners' ability to identify and select the correct answer from a list of options. Questions may cover topics such as cell structure and function, genetics, evolution, and human health.

Example Question:

Which of the following is the site of protein synthesis?

(A) Golgi apparatus (B) Nucleus (C) Ribosome (D) Mitochondria

Answer: C

Section B: Short Answer Questions (50 marks)

Short answer questions require learners to provide brief, clear, and concise answers. They may be based on topics such as molecular biology, plant physiology, and animal anatomy.

Example Question:

Explain the role of enzymes in metabolic reactions.

Answer:

Enzymes are catalysts that increase the rate of chemical reactions in living organisms. They work by lowering the activation energy required for the reaction to occur, allowing reactions to proceed more efficiently.

Section C: Long Answer Questions (30 marks)

Long answer questions provide learners with the opportunity to demonstrate their in-depth knowledge and understanding of the subject matter. They may cover complex topics such as biodiversity, human evolution, and the role of technology in life sciences.

Example Question:

Discuss the ethical implications of genetic engineering.

Answer:

Genetic engineering raises ethical concerns related to the potential impact on human health, the environment, and society. It is important to weigh the potential benefits, such as improved crop yields or disease treatments, against the risks and ensure that ethical guidelines are in place to minimize potential harm.

Section D: Practical Assessment (20 marks)

The practical assessment component allows learners to demonstrate their practical skills and knowledge. It may involve tasks such as investigating the effects of light on plant growth, dissecting an animal specimen, or conducting a chemical analysis.

Example Assessment:

Investigate the effect of different concentrations of salt on the rate of seed germination.

Answer:

The learner would conduct an experiment in which seeds are planted in varying concentrations of salt solution. The rate of germination would be measured and analyzed to determine the effect of salt concentration on seed germination.
