How can maps be used to deceive? Often, it is subtle changes to maps that can deceive or misrepresent critical data. For instance, smoothing data, changing color hue, or classifying data in a given way can also create small deceptions.

How can you mislead or lie with maps? Cartograms are another way of lying with symbolization. Cartograms are maps that distort area or distance by substituting another thematic variable. Because of the dramatic distortions that cartograms produce, you might consider them to be telling more than white lies.

How can a map be misleading? If we get the data wrong—say, the elevation of a mountain or the precise bend of a river—then our map will be inaccurate. Maps lie in many other ways, too: with symbols, through generalizations, because of scale, by omission.
