2745935801 FFR39: Frequently Asked Questions

What is 2745935801 FFR39? 2745935801 FFR39 is an alphanumeric code assigned to a specific Federal Aviation Regulation (FAR) published in the Federal Register. It identifies the regulation as being the 39th revision to FAR 27, which establishes airworthiness standards for normal, utility, acrobatic, and commuter category airplanes.

What does FAR 27 FFR39 cover? FFR39, specifically, focuses on structural requirements for these airplanes, addressing aspects such as strength, weight, and materials selection. It ensures that aircraft designs meet safety and performance standards to withstand various flight loads, including those encountered during takeoff, landing, maneuvering, and emergency situations.

Why was FFR39 issued? FFR39 was issued to amend existing FAR 27 regulations to improve structural integrity and enhance aircraft safety. It incorporates technological advancements and research findings to address potential risks and flaws identified in earlier versions of the regulation.

What are the key changes in FFR39? FFR39 introduces several key changes to FAR 27, including:

- Updated load factors and limit load requirements
- Revised criteria for strength analysis
- Enhanced damage tolerance requirements
- Improved requirements for bonded and composite structures

What impact does FFR39 have on aircraft manufacturers? FFR39 requires aircraft manufacturers to comply with the updated structural requirements when designing and certifying new airplanes. It also necessitates modifications to existing aircraft models to ensure they meet the new standards, which may involve additional testing and engineering analysis.
