2. The novel follows a group of friends through a decade of their lives. How did you develop the characters and their relationships?

Serle: I spent a lot of time thinking about the characters and their motivations. I wanted them to be relatable and accessible, but also flawed and complex. The relationships between them were carefully crafted to be realistic and authentic, reflecting the ups and downs of long-term friendships.

Serle: I hope readers will be entertained by the story, but I also hope they will think about the themes it explores. I want them to question their own dreams and aspirations, and to consider the importance of authenticity and connection in the face of fame and success.

5. What advice would you give to aspiring writers who want to write about fame and its effects on relationships?
