Solid State Physics Ashcroft Mermin Solution Manual: Questions and Answers

Question 1: What is the electronic band structure of a single crystal of silicon?

Answer: The electronic band structure of silicon is characterized by a filled valence band and an empty conduction band, separated by a bandgap of about 1.1 eV. The valence band is composed of three degenerate p-like bands, while the conduction band is a single s-like band.

Question 2: How do lattice vibrations affect the electronic band structure of a crystal?

Answer: Lattice vibrations, or phonons, can interact with electrons in the crystal. This interaction can lead to the formation of electron-phonon bands, which are new bands that are not present in the non-interacting case. The electron-phonon interaction can also lead to changes in the energy and shape of the electronic bands.

Question 3: What is superconductivity and how is it explained by solid state physics?

Answer: Superconductivity is the phenomenon where a material exhibits zero electrical resistance. This phenomenon is explained by the formation of Cooper pairs, which are pairs of electrons that are bound together by an exchange of phonons. These Cooper pairs can move through the crystal without scattering, leading to zero resistance.

Question 4: What is the Hall effect and how is it used in solid state physics?

Answer: The Hall effect is the phenomenon where a voltage is induced perpendicular to the direction of current flow in a magnetic field. This effect is used to determine the charge carrier concentration in a semiconductor or metal. The Hall coefficient is a measure of the carrier concentration and can be used to identify the type of charge carriers (electrons or holes).

Question 5: What is the difference between a direct and an indirect semiconductor?

Answer: A direct semiconductor is a semiconductor in which the minimum of the conduction band and the maximum of the valence band occur at the same point in the Brillouin zone. In an indirect semiconductor, these extrema occur at different points in the Brillouin zone. This difference has implications for the optical properties of the semiconductor, as direct semiconductors are more efficient at absorbing and emitting light.
