The Din-i Ilahi: Akbar's Religious Doctrine

What was the Din-i Ilahi?

The Din-i Ilahi, meaning "the religion of God," was a syncretic religious doctrine proclaimed by the Mughal emperor Akbar the Great in the 16th century. It sought to harmonize the diverse religious traditions prevalent in his empire, particularly Hinduism, Islam, Zoroastrianism, and Christianity.

Why did Akbar establish the Din-i Ilahi?

Akbar aimed to foster religious harmony and unity among his subjects. He believed that by blending the best elements of different faiths, he could create a universal religion that transcended sectarian divisions and promoted tolerance.

What were the key tenets of the Din-i Ilahi?

The Din-i Ilahi espoused the worship of one supreme God, the prohibition of idol worship, the rejection of asceticism, and the importance of good deeds and piety. It also emphasized the role of reason and empirical observation in religious matters.

How was the Din-i Ilahi received?

The Din-i Ilahi was met with mixed reactions. Some religious leaders criticized it as a departure from traditional beliefs, while others saw it as an innovative and progressive approach. The doctrine did not gain widespread acceptance outside

Akbar's court, but it had a significant impact on Mughal religious thought and policy.

What was the legacy of the Din-i Ilahi?

Although the Din-i Ilahi faded after Akbar's death, its principles of religious tolerance and syncretism influenced Mughal society and laid the groundwork for future interfaith dialogue and understanding.
