Tarantula by Bob Dylan

Q: What is the significance of the tarantula in the song?

A: The tarantula in the song symbolizes both power and vulnerability. Dylan uses the imagery of the tarantula to represent the animalistic instincts of humanity, which can be both destructive and creative.

Q: What is the meaning of the "used cars" in the song?

A: The "used cars" symbolize the commodification of human beings in a capitalist society. Dylan suggests that people are often treated as objects, rather than as individuals with their own unique stories and experiences.

Q: How does the song explore the themes of power and control?

A: The song depicts a power dynamic between a controlling figure (possibly the tarantula) and a more vulnerable figure (possibly the human narrator). Dylan questions the nature of power and control, and how it can be used to manipulate and exploit others.

Q: What is the significance of the lyrics "I'm a Tarantula, I'm taking a walk / Across the high wires"?

A: These lyrics suggest that the singer has embraced his own power and is willing to confront the dangers and challenges of the world. The "high wires" represent the risks associated with taking a stand and asserting oneself.

Q: How does the song end?

A: The song ends with a sense of ambiguity and uncertainty. The narrator is still struggling with his own identity and place in the world, and the outcome of his journey is left unresolved.
