Unveiling the Hidden Truths: Things Kept Concealed Since the Foundation of the World

Q: What does René Girard mean by "things hidden since the foundation of the world"?

A: René Girard, a renowned anthropologist and philosopher, believed that certain crucial truths about human nature have been obscured and suppressed throughout history. He used the metaphor of "things hidden since the foundation of the world" to refer to these concealed realities, which he discovered through his groundbreaking research on mimetic desire and sacrificial violence.

Q: Why have these truths been hidden?

A: According to Girard, these truths have been deliberately buried and disguised for two main reasons. Firstly, they expose the dark underbelly of human nature, particularly our susceptibility to envy, rivalry, and violence. Acknowledging these truths would require confronting our own complicity in these behaviors, which is often uncomfortable and socially disruptive.

Q: What are some examples of these hidden truths?

A: Girard identified several key truths that he believed had been obscured, including the following: The fundamental role of mimesis (imitation) in human desire and the generation of conflict; the scapegoating mechanism as a means of deflecting collective guilt onto an innocent victim; and the crucial importance of ritual and sacrifice in maintaining social harmony.

Q: How can we unveil these hidden truths?

A: Girard emphasized the importance of critical thinking, self-reflection, and a willingness to question established beliefs. By examining our own motivations and the dynamics of social interactions, we can begin to glimpse the truths that have been concealed. Additionally, studying history, literature, and other cultural artifacts can provide insights into the ways in which these truths have been expressed and suppressed over time.

Q: What are the implications of uncovering these hidden truths?

A: Unveiling the things hidden since the foundation of the world has profound implications for our understanding of ourselves and the human condition. It challenges our assumptions about our inherent goodness and reveals the potential for darkness within us. However, it also offers a path towards overcoming these destructive tendencies and fostering a more peaceful and just society. By acknowledging and embracing these truths, we can break free from the cycle of violence and scapegoating that has plagued humanity throughout history.
